| Site History

Salir do Porto, Portugal

Salir do Porto is a picturesque village located on the southern side of the bay of São Martinho do Porto. In the old days, Salir do Porto was one of the main seaports in the region and an important source of goods supply. In recent years, Salir do Porto became a place of retreat for actors and writers. The beach, a large sand dune with 50 meters high and over 200 meters long together with the cliffs, best known as 'Quebradas', are remarkable features in this landscape.

The bay of São Martinho do Porto is what remains of an extensive gulf that occupied a vast area with a major seaport in Alfeizerão. In the late sixteenth century, with the gradual silting of the bay, Alfeizerão port was unable to meet its functions and Salir do Porto became an important seaport for the region and a center of naval construction. The bay has three kilometers of beach and connects to the Atlantic Ocean through a 250 meter wide opening between the cliffs of Sant'Ana Chapel and the lighthouse.

The remains of the old Chapel of Sant'Ana (Capela da Senhora de Sant'Ana) and the Customs building are a valuable testimony of the historical significance of Salir do Porto.

Chapel of Sant'Ana ruins

The Chapel of Sant'Ana is located within the limits of the cliff at the bay entrance. It is believed that its construction was to praise the ships that left for sea travels during the Age of Discoveries. The access to the Chapel is made through dirt roads and the last 500 meters are made on foot.

Customs building ruins

At the foot of the cliff are the remains of the old Customs building where ships were built and repaired. It is believed that some of the ships built in this infrastructure might have been used during the Portuguese discoveries, including the flagship St. Gabriel led by the Portuguese navigator and explorer Vasco da Gama, on the discovery of the sea route to India. Located near the remains of the Customs building, there is an area of natural spring water with therapeutic properties which is used by visitors as a thermal bath.

Lighthouse and Fort

On the top of the opposite cliff is the lighthouse of São Martinho do Porto; remains of what is believed to have been a small fort can also be found there.
